What's the difference between 18/10 & 18/0 Cutlery?

Know the numbers

The 18/10 and 18/0 specifications are simply figures that illustrate the percentages of chromium and nickel content present in the stainless steel. Chromium is a hard metallic substance that helps increase product hardness. Nickel is a silvery metallic element that helps resist corrosion.

18/10 stainless steel has 18 percent chromium and 10 percent nickel content. If the product has an 18/0 construction, there is 18 percent chromium with zero nickel matter.

Understand the difference

Chromium, by itself, is not a reliable rust-resistant material. Combined with nickel, it takes on more hard-wearing properties. The combination of nickel also creates a brighter, polished look. Because of this, 18/10 products generally cost more. With or without nickel, stainless steel is a highly durable flatware material. The soft sheen and economic value of 18/0 products is an excellent choice for casual restaurants and many high-volume eateries.

18/0 Cutlery

- ✓ Soft shine
- ✓ Zero nickel content
- ✓ Economical design
- ✓ Subject to staining

18/10 Cutlery

- ✓ Brilliant luster
- ✓ Rust-resistant material
- ✓ Durable construction
- ✓ Easy to maintain
